Doris Marie Provine

Director of the School of Justice & Social Inquiry in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences at Arizona State University, Provine is a lawyer and political scientist interested in how courts and related legal institutions work. Best known for Case Selection on the US Supreme Court and Judging Credentials: Non-lawyer Judges and the Politics of Professionalism, Provine is interested in globalizing trends in law, including the rise of human-rights litigation, immigration and the courts, and the debate over "foreign" law in US jurisprudence. Her talk focuses on research for a book on the role of courts and other legal agencies in the war on drugs.
